
Development

Band singing the praises of United Cerebral Palsy will donate proceeds from its new single

StoneTribe, a reggae-inspired band, is donating 25% of the proceeds of its digital downloads from their new single, Island Time, to United Cerebral Palsy.

Band member, Daniel Walker, reflects on helping people with disabilities and explains why he and his business partner, Nate Allbritton, selected United Cerebral Palsy, Inc.

“My younger sister, Alanna Walker, had severe CP before she passed away. She touched my life in ways that only those that have been touched by children with disabilities can understand. The charity I choose to support is United Cerebral Palsy.”

Daniel said he's committed to supporting the disability community: “I feel I could raise a lot of awareness and funding. There is a huge community here (in Texas) and I know they could use an advocate, such as myself and my business partner Nate.”

If you would like to learn more about StoneTribe's music and how to participate in its UCP fundraiser, please visit www.stonetribemusic.com.